CREDIT SCORING METHODOLOGIES

The methodology for determining credit scoring and probability of default involves the analysis of various financial and operational factors. This assessment combines quantitative metrics, such as financial ratios and cash flow analysis, with qualitative factors, including legal factors and management quality.

To derive the credit scoring, the assessment evaluates the company's creditworthiness relative to industry benchmarks and historical data. The probability of default is calculated by assessing the likelihood of the company facing financial distress or defaulting on its obligations. This involves analysing factors such as debt levels, liquidity position, profitability, and overall business stability.

The methodology emphasises thorough research, statistical modelling, and expert judgment to provide a comprehensive and accurate evaluation of the subject company's credit scoring and probability of default.

Financial & Non-Financial Factors

Historical and Ownership Review (35%)

This assessment takes account of various historical, ownership and legal factors relevant to the subject company.

Leverage Assessment (28%)

This assessment evaluates how effectively the subject company manages its financial structure.

Profitability Assessment (15%)

This assessment considers the financial performance and profitability of the subject company.

Liquidity Assessment (12%)

This assessment evaluates the efficiency of the subject company in managing its working capital and cash flow.

Operational Efficiency (5%)

This assessment reviews the subject company's ability to manage its operational assets efficiently.

External Auditor (5%)

This assessment evaluates the firm of external auditors engaged by the subject company.

The % in the bracket represents the weightage applied in the calculation of the credit score.*
